HOLY COW

Chobani announced a historic $1.2 billion investment in the Commonwealth early Tuesday morning. The investment will establish the yogurt company's first dairy operation in Pennsylvania and is the largest private investment in the state's agricultural history. The new facility, which will be located in Upper Macungie Township, is expected to create 900 jobs over the next five years. According to the Shapiro Administration, the facility could process up to 30% of the milk consumed across the Commonwealth, providing a significant boost to Pennsylvania's dairy industry and support to rural communities and farmers.

EMOTIONAL HOMECOMING

The remains of 12 Native American and Alaska Native children who died while attending the Carlisle Indian Industrial School will finally be disinterred and returned to their families and tribes. The process began yesterday and is expected to continue through mid-October, marking the ninth year of repatriations from the boarding school cemetery. The Carlisle school operated from 1879 to 1918, and at least 168 children died there. Families and tribal representatives will be able to perform ceremonies before the remains are returned to tribal lands or locations closer to home.

UBER EVERYWHERE

Temple University is adding Uber to its on-campus transportation options this fall through a new pilot program. Beginning September 10th, eligible students will receive three Uber vouchers worth up to $10 each for rides that start or end within Temple's designated patrol zone. The university's nighttime Flight shuttle will continue to operate from 6 p.m. to 2 a.m., but its frequency will decrease from every 15 minutes to every 30 minutes. Temple says the pilot program will help determine how students use both services and inform future transportation decisions.

A BAD SEED

Panorama Produce, a New York based distributor, has issued a recall of mangoes distributed to New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Pennsylvania because of salmonella contamination. The company announcement featured on the FDA website described 300 boxes of mangoes with light blue stickers labeled, "Agrofepec, Produce of Mexico." As of last Friday, no illnesses have been linked to the mangoes, but customers who suspect that they have purchased the product should dispose of it. Consumers are urged to contact their healthcare provider if they have symptoms of salmonella such as fever and frequent vomiting.

CLOSURE

Yesterday, The Academy of Natural Sciences of Drexel University in Philadelphia announced that it will close its doors at the end of the month. The museum and research institution serves as the country's oldest after existing for nearly two centuries, opening in 1828 to the public. Last October, the museum reduced its operating hours to just weekends following low visitation rates and federal cuts. According to the museum, the reason for the closure is due to increased costs; however, they remain committed to the stewardship of the museum and preserving the 19 million scientific archives. Has anyone thought about moving it to Harrisburg??
